Online Job Search Engines

1. Monster.com – The Monster of Online Job Hunting

<https://www.monster.com/>

Whenever anyone needs access to job markets across the world, Monster is an obvious place to start. Monster has grown into the largest job search site on the Internet, and serves just about every community across the world.

monster
Your calling is calling™

A screenshot of the Monster.com website's search interface. It features a green header with navigation links: Home, Profile & Resume, Jobs, and Career. Below the header is a search bar with the text "Search Jobs" and a placeholder "Enter keywords (e.g., nurse, sale)". To the right of the search bar is a dropdown menu showing "(e.g. Boston)". Below the search bar is a checkbox labeled "Search job title only" and a link for "US Locations".

What makes the Monster of job search sites so useful is that the "International Search" will net you a pretty nice catch of job opportunities all across the globe. Of course, Monster also offers a free "home page", a place for you to post your resume, and an entire section of some pretty cool "career tools" to help you research every step of the job hunting process.

2. Job.com – An Obvious Choice Among Job Search Websites

<http://www.job.com/>

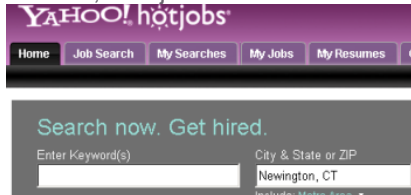

I guess when it comes to finding a job, visiting a website like Job.com makes sense. Like Monster, it is one of the few job search websites that offers the ability to search Internationally.

A screenshot of the Job.com homepage. It features a blue header with the Job.com logo and the tagline "Gear for Your Career". Below the header is a navigation bar with links: Home, Jobseeker Menu, and Career Tools.

Under "Additional Search Options", you can search from general areas of the globe, such as Middle East, United Kingdom or Pacific Rim. The site boasts over 700,000 listings, and they all seem fairly current. It also has the ability to publish your resume so that employers can view it.

3. HotJobs – When You Can't Get Enough of Job Hunting

Yahoo! Hotjobs is definitely Monster's greatest competition. One of the things that Yahoo is very good at is providing content, and job seekers who visit the Hotjobs job search website are going to get exactly that.

A screenshot of the Yahoo! HotJobs search interface. It features a purple header with the Yahoo! HotJobs logo. Below the header is a navigation bar with links: Home, Job Search, My Searches, My Jobs, and My Resumes. Below the navigation bar is a search bar with the text "Search now. Get hired." and a placeholder "Enter Keyword(s)". To the right of the search bar is a dropdown menu showing "City & State or ZIP" with "Newington, CT" selected.

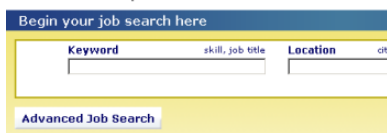

The site itself has the same "look and feel" of other Yahoo pages, and it has lots of articles and widgets from tools like Yahoo Answers. Aside from all that bonus content, it offers a powerful job search engine that includes many thousands of listings from all throughout the world.

4. Net Temps – Full or Part Time Jobs

<http://www.net-temps.com/>

Net-Temps is primarily a website devoted to temporary workers who were looking for the "next gig.". However, it is not a whole lot difference than the rest of the job search websites, except for the fact that it allows job hunters to filter search results by temp or full-time work.

Net-Temps

A screenshot of the Net-Temps search interface. It features a blue header with the text "Begin your job search here". Below the header is a search bar with two input fields: "Keyword" (with a placeholder "skill, job title") and "Location" (with a placeholder "city"). Below the search bar is a button labeled "Advanced Job Search".

For most folks looking for a job, the difference is irrelevant – they need a job to pay the bills. But for freelancers who work for themselves, temp jobs give them the flexibility of a short term client contract, so that afterwards the freelancer can move on to the next job in their schedule.

5. Indeed – Simple and Effective

what where
job title, keywords or company name city, state or zip code

This site is quite a job search engine indeed! Sick of sifting through dozens of individual job search sites? Indeed is a job meta-search engine which means that employers don't actually have to list jobs with Indeed. Much like how Dogpile provides results from multiple search engines like Google and Yahoo, Indeed offers you job listings from not only sites like Hotjobs and CareerBuilder, but even the individual employer websites – now that's cool.

6. CareerBuilder – The Name Says It All

<https://www.careerbuilder.com/>

There's little question that CareerBuilder is one of the "big boys" of the job search websites. Like Monster and Hotjobs, you'll find a resume posting section, the ability to find jobs by company or industry, and a very cool "job alerts" feature. What sets CareerBuilder apart from the others? Not a lot. But if you need another source that may have job listings the others don't – it's best to check it out, as there are quite a library of job listings stored there.

7. All Job Search – It Really Does Search Them All

<http://www.alljobsearch.com/>

AllJobSearch's claim to fame is it's ability, like Indeed, to search through multiple sources. The service covers the U.S., Canada and the UK. It boasts the ability to search over 200 websites, over 500 newspapers and over 300 newsgroups. Impressive.

Keyword (e.g. pro
and or phrase || title desc

Unfortunately, you're provided a list of links to outside sources like an online newspaper or Monster, and if you click the link, AllJobSearch will automatically search that engine with your job search terms. While it probably saves time searching for the many job sources around the Net, it doesn't exactly provide the search results as you'd normally expect.

8. SimplyHired – You're Hired!

<http://www.simplyhired.com/>

Keywords Job Title, Skills, or Company Name Location City

I have to say, of all of the job listings sites that you'll find on the web, SimplyHired takes the cake simply for the sites "tools" section, where you'll find some of the coolest widgets, like email alerts, trend research and salary information broken down by location and occupation. If you haven't yet decided what you want to be when you grow up – this is the first site you should visit.

9. USA.gov – It's Good Enough for Gov't Work

<https://www.usajobs.gov/>

One of the world's wealthiest countries in the world is also one of the world's largest employers. The U.S. Federal government has its own giant online job database that you can search under whatever industry or discipline you're interested in.

These jobs are worldwide, and the U.S. government isn't shy about listing the actual salary ranges right there in the listing. Some of those salaries aren't too shabby either.

10. College Recruiter – Not Only for Students

<https://www.collegerecruiter.com/>

Over the years, employers got into the habit of going to college career centers to advertise their entry level positions. In fact, sometimes those are the only places they'll advertise those openings. The CollegeRecruiter search engine is networked with 11,000 career sites around the country including college, university and military offices. Yes, these are entry level positions, but when you want to get your foot in the door, taking an entry level position is often the best way to go.
